Dajuan Walker, better known by his stage name Suga Free Tha Pimp, born on January 17, 1970, is an American rapper and former pimp from Pomona, California.

Suga Free was born in Gardena and raised in Oakland, California; later becoming based in Pomona, California.

His fate turned when he was heard by one of DJ Quik's partners. He began his professional rapping career working with DJ Quik who served as the producer for his debut album, 'Street Gospel', which released in 1997. The album was a major hit and reached number 37 on the Billboard Top R&B/Hip-Hop Albums chart.

Suga Free made guest appearances on Xzibit's "Restless" and Snoop Dogg's "Tha Last Meal in 2000", and released a second album in 2004, "The New Testament", which peaked at number 72 on the Billboard 200. "Just Add Water" followed in 2006, described by AllMusic: "Just Add Water may not be the complete handbook to being a pimp, but it certainly is a kind of missive on the life of Suga Free". The album was described as "charismatic and funny, with a rapid- fire-yet-conversational style" by the Chicago Tribune.

In 2007, his album "Sunday School" had both Messy Marv and Mac Dre in it. "Smell My Finger" and "Hi Power Pimpin'" followed in 2008 and 2009 respectively, after which he took a two-year break.

In 2011, his compilation album 'Why U Still Bullshittin: The Best of Suga Free' was released and in 2014 he followed it up with the single "Grooveline, Pt 2", featuring Schoolboy Q. After a ten-year break, Suga Free released the album "The Resurrection" on May 5, 2019, as well as a compilation album "Group Therapy Project" February 26, 2021.

Suga Free is an iconic rapper who has dominated the music scene ever since his debut in 1997. His rapping is unique and distinct and touches all aspects - be it humor or drama. It is for this that Suga Free is often called the rhythmic wizard in the world of music.
